

The Death of Irony and The Birth of New Sincerity

Reflections by Cheselyn Amato

She actually experienced in its heart-breaking reality the distance between 'knowing' and 'knowing with all one's soul,' and the one object of her life was to abolish that distance.

'Our life is impossibility and absurdity. Everything that we want is in contradiction with the conditions or consequences which are attached to it. It is because we ourselves are a contradiction, being creatures, being God and infinitely other than God.

Instead of filling the space which stretches between necessity and goodness with dreams we must receive the two branches of contradiction just as they are and allow ourselves to be torn asunder by their distance.

There is impossibility and absurdity. Everything that we want is in contradiction with the conditions or consequences which are attached to it. It is because we ourselves are a contradiction, being creatures, being God, and possibly other than God. Instead of being the space which connects between necessity and goodness with dreams we must make the two aspects of existence call at the one and other. Survival is to be one or the other or both at once.
